Deardre Anne “D’Anne” Breutsch-Goldberg

On June 7, 1948, the year Harry S. Truman defeated Thomas Dewey to remain President of the U.S., an adorable blond, curly-haired little boy was born in Guthrie, Oklahoma, into a family highly connected with state Democratic politics. Those connections included, over the years, the chair of the Oklahoma Democratic Party, an Oklahoma City Mayor and a Governor.

Four years later, the same year that war-hero Dwight David Eisenhower first defeated Adlai Stevenson for President, that little boy – recently shorn of his curls for a “more-masculine” Marine-style crew-cut, shocked her parents’ politically-connected family and friends at a garden party for the Chamber of Commerce. She proudly announced that she was really the curly-haired girl in a picture of her pre-clipped self she flashed generously among the party-goers.

“Oh, my, did it hit the fan that day,” D’Anne recalls. “That photograph disappeared – for over 30 years – I thought it had been destroyed. At our parents’ orders, my four-years-older brother told me I was NEVER to embarrass the family like that again! Thus began more than two painful, tortured decades of the girl on the inside masquerading as a good little boy on the outside and to the world. The rift between my brother and me – and even his children and grandchildren, who know so very little about me – has never really healed to this day.”
The pretty little girl in the picture, which “went missing”

For years after that incident, her parents seemed intent on “fixing” their son. So she did everything in her power to play the male gender role expected of her.

“I was the best little boy in all of Logan County,” D’Anne recalls. “I was just a regular guy through my childhood – not allowed to play with girls – neither my family nor the girls would permit it. Only other boys could come and play with me. Fortunately, my parents’ best friends had two girls – no boys – so I got to play with them the most. On another note, I had a favorite doll that I kept in my room – until mid-high-school, when it somehow disappeared into the same black hole that whisked away my treasured photo of the curly tow-headed little girl.”

After many years of feeling isolated, her social life finally began when she was a sophomore in high school.

“I was invited to a party by a girl,” D’Anne recalls, “which somehow made it acceptable as a teenager, even though I hadn’t been allowed to associate with girls earlier. I refused to accept the invitation for several days, but one day was informed that I HAD accepted the invitation and would be going. Though I dreaded the party – in a big hall in town – it turned out to be quite fun with boys on one side and girls on the other. That launched me into a life of bogus ‘dating’ and pretending to be one of the boys. I even tried playing baseball and football to fit in. What a joke that was! It was just plain torture and I was no good at any of that!”

By senior year, when everybody was expected to have a ‘steady’, the progression from holding hands to kissing to petting with a girl was almost more than the ‘pretend boy’ could handle.

“When Jamie wanted to go farther than petting, I began to hyperventilate and had to come up with some excuse,” D’Anne says. “When I told her I was worried about Parkinson’s, her Mom soon called my Mom, which resulted in my being sent to a psychiatrist. One of my worst fears was that I would one day be sent to a shrink, who would’ve been told by my parents that they wouldn’t take me back until I was ‘fixed’. The presenting issue in that session remained the fear of Parkinson’s, so I was quite relieved to get out of there alive and be returned to my family!

In the occasional “what do you want to do when you grow up” discussions, nothing was ever masculine enough for the family.

“When my father asked if I wouldn’t like to be an engineer, I responded that I really liked to bake!” D’Anne recollects. “Nothing that I liked to do was the kind of career path that a boy should be pursuing, according to them. So I mostly stopped participating in those conversations, as I knew they were pretty much dead-end.”

Her parents – who told her independently they had only stayed together until she finished with high school – divorced soon after her graduation.

“After I moved my tassle from right to left, they gave me some money and a used car,” she recalls, “implying such encouraging things as ‘you’re probably not going to amount to much’, sending me out into the world without even a hi-ho silver. Dad moved out, he and my brother somehow became best friends – after very contentious, sometimes knock-down father-son battles over the years. I was left to fend for myself. Our mother was somehow demonized by my brother for everything that had gone wrong in that family – I was unwilling to declare her satanic, however, even though she hadn’t been particularly kind to me, either.”

D’Anne went to Oklahoma State University in Stillwater, where she earned a Bachelor of Science degree in math. It was 1970 and the Vietnam War was looming.

“To avoid the draft, I had joined the Air Force ROTC, so I went into the Air Force as an officer,” she recalls. “Equally important in my mind, however, was that I find a serious relationship with a woman. I found someone who was interested and we dated for five months. Since she was not a virgin and I was, it took six or seven tries before I could actually pull off the intimacy thing. I remember thinking, ‘Hey, I CAN be a guy!’ So we got married. When we had lived together for about six months – I was desperately unhappy – she started saying she wanted us to have a child. I told her I didn’t want to do that – that I didn’t think I would be a good father. Of course, she didn’t know that I’d always thought of myself as a mother, but never a father!”

While D’Anne was stationed in San Bernardino, she was assigned to Johnston Island in the South Pacific, where nuclear testing had happened, leaving all kinds of hazardous waste everywhere. Within a month, she received divorce papers from her wife.

“Though I had mixed emotions about it, I didn’t hesitate to sign the divorce papers. I was very worried about her,” D’Anne recalls. “Her mother informed me that she was not okay, which hurt me a lot. I realized that marrying her had been a very selfish thing – trying to sort out or camouflage my own gender issues – something I regret terribly. Fortunately, my ex-wife soon found another Air Force guy – somebody from my squadron – and subsequently married him.”

Though the divorce took six months to be finalized, D’Anne immediately told her commander that she needed to see a psychiatrist. She was sent to Honolulu, where the Air Force mental health services provider suggested he not write anything down (since “there could be serious repercussions if there were anything in writing”) and that she instead go to see a provider who had recently left the military. Meanwhile, the Air Force psychiatrist’s notes concluded that she was under “post-divorce stress”, prescribed some calming drugs and gave her books to read.

“I might’ve received a medical discharge for ‘gender dysphoria’ or some such if this guy hadn’t been as generous and far-sighted,” D’Anne suggests. “Instead, I was able to finish my tour of duty, apply for release from the Air Force and be removed from active duty. Initially, there was resistance to my leaving, since they had invested so much in me. I was going to be sent to the basement of Gerald Ford’s 1974 White House. There were threats that they would try to keep me for the full 20 years. Actually, I gave one more Pacific Command briefing and – because of the post-Vietnam glut of officers – I was released from duty on 15th December 1975. On that day, I began my transition to Deardre Anne. It was clear to me – and eventually to my psych – that I was born female and needed to live my life that way if I were ever going to be happy.”

Within six months, she was living 24/7 as female. She’s never looked back and has no regrets about that decision.

“My decision was not whether to be transgender or not, but whether to be HAPPY or not,” D’Anne has concluded. “I was 26 years old and had spent most of that time miserable, hating myself and struggling to make real contact with other human beings. My main goal in life had been to hide who I really was from everybody! I needed to experience the joy I had felt during those first four years of life, after which I’d felt bullied by others to be something that I wasn’t. How exhilarating – and somewhat scary – those transition years were!”

By then a resident in Hawaii, D’Anne had her surgery done at a clinic which remained closeted about the procedures – and only allowed two such surgeries per month. During this time she made contact with the Mahu community, which – before colonization by white people – were considered special, assuming respected roles in passing on tradition from one generation to the next. After her surgery, she lived with “Mama D”, who provided guidance and actually became an adoptive mother to her. That relationship eased those transition years considerably.

After the surgery, D’Anne was unsure what job-hunting would be like as a woman. Many had warned her she would never be able to earn as much as a man would earn. She found that to be untrue in her field.

“I was in Hawaii from 1973-1985 – including work at Mauna Kea Observatories – plus I was in Tucson for ten years and wound up in the Bay area from 1995 on, retiring in 2015,” she recalls. “I was always making good money. I’ve mostly worked in high-tech software, operating systems for telescopes and a myriad of other devices needed by NASA, as well as cutting-edge tech companies around the world. I spent the last years of my career with Wind River Systems in Alameda and Konika-Minolta down on the Peninsula. This high-tech work has been very rewarding, personally, financially and professionally, involving programs of almost inter-galactic proportions sometimes. If scientists have questions about a problem with the Hubbell Telescope, for instance, they’ll likely call Wind River and ask for my colleague, Mike!”

Though she has lived in Castro Valley for most of her time in the Bay area, her work on the Peninsula contributed to her providential involvement with the Many Journeys MCC in San Mateo. That’s where she married the love of her life, Ary, in November 2016.

“Since I’m a very trusting person, I made some pretty bad relationship choices before I met Ary,” D’Anne recalls. “I met her at the Out Standing Seniors support group in Hayward, facilitated by Beckie, who is the editor of the Lavender Seniors newsletter! Ary is the sweetest, kindest and nicest person I have ever met. We’ve been together since 2014 and coming up on our second wedding anniversary next month! I’ve been totally accepted by her children and grandchildren – they call me ‘Mom’ and ‘Grandma,’ words I’ve waited all my life to hear! I’ve finally found a family that I truly feel a part of!”

When her biological mother was dying of cancer in the early 90s and could no longer care for herself, D’Anne brought her into her Tucson home for the last months of her life. Though they were never really close, her mother had given her the treasured photograph in the 1980s that had been taken away when she was four years old – from a box of photos and other memorabilia she had saved for her – but not including the doll that had disappeared.

“Though both my parents had been horrified initially when I told them about my upcoming transition, I was able to make peace with both of them before they died,” D’Anne recollects. “They had the usual periods of denial – ‘maybe this is just a phase’ or ‘maybe you’re just gay’ – but eventually both accepted that they probably always knew they had never really had a second son, but had gained a daughter. My brother and his family are a different story – we’re not exactly estranged, but we rarely talk to or see each other – and it can be uncomfortable for all concerned, even with his kids and grandkids, whom I’ve had very little contact with. I think they may think of me like their father once said as ‘a man in a dress’, but I do sometimes feel bad about our not knowing each other better.”

Besides her marital and church families, however, she has also developed close relationships with kindred spirits through organizations like Lavender Seniors and a group of relocated Hawaiian Mahus who did a lot of public speaking, both with PFLAG and independently. She has volunteered with Lavender Seniors as a Friendly Visitor, a group facilitator and on the Board of Directors. She was featured in one of the eight Lavender Scrolls developed by Lavender Seniors in 2006-07 (click here to see the Scroll and Bio).

“It was after the Newark murder of Gwen Araujo in October 2002 that I decided I owed it to my community to become more politically active and help make the transgendered community safer and more visible,” D’Anne recalls. “Though some things appear to have improved since then, I’m afraid there are still four-year-olds – or forty-year-olds – in the world whose spirits are being bullied into believing they’re not good enough. The ‘it gets better’ type of campaign will hopefully help some of them get through that, but we’re all going to have to work at making it safe for everybody to be who they were born to be!”

D’Anne and Ary have moved recently from Castro Valley to Tracy to be closer to their family, a move they are both quite happy with. Fortunately for us in the immediate Bay area, they still continue their involvement in San Mateo’s Many Journeys MCC, participating in groups and activities in Hayward, San Leandro and Oakland.

Thank you, D’Anne, for sharing so much of your life with your community. We’re all happy for you and Ary. You deserve the best!
BOOK REVIEW

Transgender History: Second Edition. The Roots of Today's Revolution
By Susan Stryker

Stryker is the associate professor of Gender and Women's Studies at the University of Arizona. She won an Emmy Award for the documentary film, "Screaming Queens: The Riot at Compton's Cafeteria"

What we get here is a history of the medical approach to the trans community formation, identity politics and the civil rights battle. She concentrates on the years after World War II.

Stryker tells us about a childhood where she knew at an early age that she was trapped in a male body. In 1991 at age 30 she started to come out. She was a victim of homophobia. She traveled worldwide and was active in the Bay Area.

This is a breathtaking chronicle of the trans fight for basic human rights. All freedom loving folks should read and rejoice that things are getting better, though we still have a long way to go.

-Frank Howell

LAVENDER SENIORS FRIENDLY VISITOR PROGRAM HAS VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITIES AVAILABLE.
Volunteers with the Lavender Seniors Friendly Visitor program are background checked, interviewed and trained, after which they are matched with a senior to visit regularly, usually for a couple hours each week. Visitors can share stories, chat about mutual interests and current events, and if both are willing and able, volunteers can take their seniors out for a walk in the park, a bite to eat, a cup of coffee, shopping or maybe a movie or a trip to the museum.

We ask volunteers to make a commitment of at least six months.

If you are in need of a Friendly Visitor, we can help with that too!

Please contact karen@lavenderseniors.org and we will be in touch with you soon. Thank You!

Call Her Ganda

Frameline Encore - Free Screening and Q&A
Piedmont Theater, 4186 Piedmont, Oakland,

All Frameline Encore Screenings are FREE & open to the public - Piedmont Theater

CALL HER GANDA
DIRECTOR: PJ Raval
2018 | USA, Philippines | 93m

Her mother called her ganda, "beautiful" in Tagalog. Her family and friends called her Jennifer. The U.S. Marine who killed her called her "it." This film calls for justice – for Jennifer Laude and for her country. Director PJ Raval (Before You Know It, Trouble the Water) unreels a piercing, kaleidoscopic indictment of U.S. colonial power in the Philippines, set against the aftermath of the brutal murder of a transgender woman.

The evidence is clear: 19-year-old Private Joseph Scott Pemberton is guilty. But the geopolitical situation is murkier: by dictate of a controversial 1999 agreement, the U.S. government retains jurisdiction over military personnel accused of committing crimes in the Philippines. And so we are led, by crusading trans journalist Meredith Talusan, the family's tenacious attorneys, and Laude's anguished, grieving mother, in and out of byzantine legal maneuvers, through the dark streets of Olongapo City to interview other transgender sex workers, and back to a kitchen filled with the sizzling of comfort food. Interwoven with Raval's poetic vérité imagery-marvelously shot by cinematographer Mike Simpson-are cell phone videos of a radiant Jennifer Laude in a red dress, twirling before the camera, that play a haunting refrain. As legal chaos swirls, as the media feasts, as activists march, and as the populist demagoguery of Duterte threatens, we are always brought back to the exquisite humanity and promise of an individual woman.

This film has a scene of transphobic violence.

Call Her Ganda is a recipient of the Frameline Completion Fund.

In English and Tagalog with English subtitles.

REVIEWS:

"Handling its complex issues and complicated plot developments with forceful clarity, the film proves simultaneously heartbreaking and inspirational..."
- FRANK SCHECK, The Hollywood Reporter

"An unflinching and eye-opening investigation into the emotional, physical and political toll continued American military presence is having in that country..."
- KEVIN RITCHIE, NOW

"A significant tale of the fight to see trans rights as human rights and to confront the greater systems of power that continue to compound inequality. It's a tough but vital film..."

October’s selection in the Lavender Seniors Film Series is an LGBTQ delight, combining a love story, good music, syncopated dancing (and a few athletic moves on the rugby pitch), comedy, fun fantasy and, of course, gorgeous young men! “Were the World Mine” is a 2008 gay remake inspired by Shakespeare’s “A Midsummer Night's Dream”, staged at a mythical all-boys’ school.

Timothy (Tanner Cohen) is an openly gay student at a private boys' school. Although now in his senior year, he is still persecuted by the aggressive rugby team, on whose captain, Jonathon (Nathaniel David Becker), Timothy has a crush. Timothy lives with his mother, Donna (Judy McLane), who is struggling with her son's sexuality and with getting a job. His father is not a part of his life.

Timothy is reluctantly cast as Puck in the senior production of A Midsummer Night's Dream. While reviewing his lines, he discovers the recipe for creating the flower love-in-idleness. Timothy uses the flower to have the homophobic town take a "walk in his shoes". The entire town is thrown into chaos as previously heterosexual community members fall in love with their same-sex friends, bosses, and co-workers: whomever they first saw after being sprayed by the flower. The school drama teacher, Ms. Tebbit (Wendy Robie of “Twin Peaks” fame), guides Timothy towards the question of whether his actions have caused more harm than good.

A color drenched, winning musical film-fantasy of a struggling and bullied gay teen,
Timothy, whose spirit soars when his eccentric teacher casts him as Puck in A Midsummer Night’s Dream. After magically discovering the play’s love-potion, Timothy puckishly begins to turn his closed-minded town gay - including casting a love spell on the town’s stunning jock - with hilarious and unexpected results. After he reluctantly restores the town’s free will, he is amazed with the surprising results. If you could magically make someone love you, would you?

The brilliantly eccentric drama teacher

The funny musician in love with Timothy’s best friend

The Lavender Seniors film series is held in the fully-accessible Carnegie Lecture Hall at the San Leandro Public Library, 300 Estudillo. Screening begins at 1pm on the Third Wednesday, 17th of October. Following the showing, there will be a brief evaluation and discussion of the film.

Attendees are reminded that the theater is frequently chilly in the summer, so a sweater or light jacket is recommended. Library staff report that temperature is controlled automatically and cannot be altered for any one room in the facility.

The library can be reached via BART (five blocks above the San Leandro station), AC-Transit (two blocks above the E. 14th and Estudillo bus-stop), Bancroft Avenue, Highways 580 or 880. Ample two- and three-hour parking is available.

Update from 2712 Telegraph

Many – if not most – LGBTQ seniors in the East Bay have personal and/or professional history with the Pacific Center for Human Growth (PC) at 2712 Telegraph in Berkeley. The days of 100-150 women showing up for SOL (Slightly Older Lesbians) on Thursday nights or 100-150 men showing up for the “Monday Night Raps” from the late 1970s to mid-1990s may have gone the way of the dinosaur, but the PC has continued chugging along for 45+ years, offering vital services to the community.

The PC is one of the oldest and continuously-running organizations in the... country providing mental health, social services and educational services for what USED to be called (for original funding) “sexual minorities” (then described as lesbian, gay, bisexual, or transgender – the “Q” for “Questioning” or “Queer” was only added for the now-common acronym LGBTQ in the late 20th and early 21st century).

Anne Mitchell, Director of the PC’s Peer and Elder Services Programs, will be on hand for the Third Friday Lunch Bunch, 19th October, to describe all of the Center’s programs, including the “Older and Out” support groups readers can see listed in the “Calendar” section at the end of this newsletter, covering virtually every corner of Alameda County.

A nutritious buffet lunch (including vegetarian options) will be served at 12 noon at North Oakland Senior Center, 5714 MLK Jr Way (corner 58th Street). Following community announcements at 12:45pm, the program will be turned over to Anne from Pacific Center. There will be a Q&A session after her presentation.

The parking lot and entrance are in the rear of the building off 58th Street. Please feel free to join us!
